Scientists working on the most authoritative study on climate change were urged to cover up the fact that the world's temperature hasn't risen for the last 15 years, it is claimed.

A leaked copy of a United Nations report, compiled by hundreds of scientists, shows politicians in Belgium, Germany, Hungary and the United States raised concerns about the final draft.

Published next week, it is expected to address the fact that 1998 was the hottest year on record and world temperatures have not yet exceeded it, which scientists have so far struggled to explain.

The report is the result of six years' work by UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), which is seen as the world authority on the extent of climate change and what is causing it – on which governments including Britain's base their green policies.

Concerns: Scientists have been urged to cover up the fact that the Earth's temperature hasn't risen for the last 15 years amid fears it would provide ammunition for deniers of man-made climate change

But leaked documents seen by the Associated Press, yesterday revealed deep concerns among politicians about a lack of global warming over the past few years.

Germany called for the references to the slowdown in warming to be deleted, saying looking at a time span of just 10 or 15 years was 'misleading' and they should focus on decades or centuries.

Hungary worried the report would provide ammunition for deniers of man-made climate change.

Belgium objected to using 1998 as a starting year for statistics, as it was exceptionally warm and makes the graph look flat - and suggested using 1999 or 2000 instead to give a more upward-pointing curve.

The United States delegation even weighed in, urging the authors of the report to explain away the lack of warming using the 'leading hypothesis' among scientists that the lower warming is down to more heat being absorbed by the ocean - which has got hotter.

The last IPCC 'assessment report' was published in 2007 and has been the subject of huge controversy after it had to correct the embarrassing claim that the Himalayas would melt by 2035.

It was then engulfed in the 'Climategate' scandal surrounding leaked emails allegedly showing scientists involved in it trying to manipulate their data to make it look more convincing - although several inquiries found no wrongdoing.

The latest report, which runs to 2,000 pages, will be shown to representatives from all 195 governments next week at a meeting in Stockholm, who can discuss alterations they want to make.

But since it was issued to governments in June, they have raised hundreds of objections about the 20-page summary for policymakers, which sums up the findings of the scientists.

What it says will inform renewable energy policies and how much consumers and businesses will pay for them.

The report is expected to say the rate of warming between 1998 and 2012 was about half of the average rate since 1951 - and put this down to natural variations such as the El Nino and La Nina ocean cycles and the cooling effects of volcanoes.

A German climate scientist - Stefan Rahmstorf, who reviewed the chapter on sea levels - yesterday admitted it was possible the report's authors were feeling under pressure to address the slowdown in warming due to the 'public debate' around the issue.

The draft report, which is not new research but a synthesis of all the work being done by scientists around the world, is likely to be highly disputed at the three-day meeting.

It will make the case that humans are causing global warming with carbon emissions even more strongly upgrading it from 'very likely' in 2007 to 'extremely likely' it is manmade.

But scientists are under pressure to explain why the warming has not exceeded 1998 levels although the decade 2000-2010 was the hottest on record.

Alden Meyer, of the Union of Concerned Scientists based in Washington, said yesterday: 'I think to not address it would be a problem because then you basically have the denialists saying: 'Look the IPCC is silent on this issue.'

Jonathan Lynn, a spokesman for the IPCC said yesterday: 'This is the culmination of four years' work by hundreds of scientists, where governments get a chance to ensure the summary for policymakers is clear and concise in a dialogue with the scientists who wrote it, and have the opportunity to raise any topics they think should be highlighted.'

Climate change is natural. It's taken place over billions of years. We had Ice ages we had trouts where there is now water there used to be land. where there is land there is water. Asking us to turn of the standby light on the TV will not save the planet. The Climate change phobia is to generate taxes and create businesses which make a lot of money out of peoples fears. Windmills and Solar will never cover demand.

HOLY WOW! I GUESS WE "CLIMATE CHANGE DENIERS" HAD SOMETHING GOING HERE. Seriously, calling us "climate change deniers" makes them look completely unscientific, as they are essentially calling us the scientific version of a heretic, in my opinion. Science seeks to be falsified, so they should WANT climate change deniers all around.

In the last year that nonsense was superseded by the equally nonsensical theory that man made CO2 is causing the jet stream(s) to deviate abnormally. Now, the flavour of the month 'theory' is the oceans are warming up due to man made CO2. The reality is that there is no reliable data covering significant periods of time for any of this rubbish. The scam has been found out. They are now in make glib excuses mode and panicking that their all expenses paid boondoggles and government grants are going to go away - expect them to say ANYTHING to keep their wallets stuffed with taxpayers' money. They will be supported by bankers and politicians who wanted to make a bundle out of carbon credit schemes. The only problem is that the climate is not playing - these scammers really need to start thinking hard on what they will do when the climate continues to cool as it has over the last 3 years.

Damned lies and statistics... but the ideology has its fanatics and they do not need any facts to whip themselves up into a frenzy in fact the fewer facts they have the better... more than a few of them were out winding themselves up in poor Balcombe. We have a new ideology and we are only a few points away from "skeptics" being burned at the stake by these lunatics!

The "hottest decade" on record is not as hot as the 1930's (although 1930 records have been subjected to "adjustment", which somehow always ended in downward adjustment). Then, the hottest decade on record is still much cooler than the warmest period of the Medieval Warm Period, 850 AD to 1350 AD, when England had thriving vineyards where there aren't any now. But that was not as warm as the Roman Warm Period, which was not as warm as the Minoan Warm

After all these years, and the billions of dollars spent on research, the "best" solution they could come up with is Carbon Taxation. I realize that oil companies spent 10's of millions on AGW research. But, the States has spent 10's of billions- $10 million per day for several years - to prove we are the reason. A money goes to research facilities and universities all over the world. Some institutions of the institution departments at universities might even close down without this money. There is plenty of motivation for accurate science there. Even to the point of trying to convince us that CO2 is not plant food or that variations in output have no effect here on Earth. And no one talks about the distant past - when CO2 prominent in the atmosphere as oxygen is today - and oxygen was almost non-existent. Where did the Carbon go, Teacher? That piece of chalk in your hand... It doesn't stay in the atmosphere - there is no "tipping point."

This is what we have known all along. The whole IPCC process is a political process, not a scientific one. Those same politicians are now desperate to cover up the fact that global warming is not occurring because they have staked their political reputations on it - with green taxes and all the nonsense about renewable energy. The reality is that the genuine science is far from settled and natural changes are more than likely to be the major explanation in how our climate has warmed and cooled over time.

Of course its cover up. Global warming is a myth, there's no facts whatsoever and we've known for a while now that the earth stopped cooling in 1998. The Medieval warm period destroys these hippies 'facts'. Its a myth with no actual concrete scientific evidence to back up their claims, whereas there is concrete scientific evidence to say global warming is a load of old rubbish. Now, will the government stop with this wind farm nonsense and green energy tax rubbish the greens love to hear about.

It was always just a big con trick to leverage research grants from idiot politicians who in turn raised taxes on the masses so that their corporate and land owning buddies could all get in on the swindle of green taxes for inefficient renewables like wind turbines and solar panels. So let's have the immediate scrapping of green tax supplement on energy bills, road fuel, air travel and all the other stealth taxes we've been saddled with.

Rosebud, please allow me to make a small correction to your otherwise spot-on comments: AGW is NOT " the 21st century replacement for religion" since it IS a religion in and of itself - one that requires a great deal of faith in the absence of concrete, physical proof of fact. Personally, I just can't muster that kind of faith. I find it far easier to believe in the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection.
